Chapter 4: Protecting the Invention...

The CE having given its approval, our hero helped with the changes. A patent lawyer started drafting the invention: DRRAFTING THE PATENT.

No publication!

Once the patent was filed, they still had to answer questions to convince the patent office that the invention was worth protecting.

A patent being a territorial right, it needed to be extended to every country where the invention needed to be protected.

How to pick them? A market study is usually the most efficient way to know...

All of this, plus the motivation, required a lot of gold... but, where to find it?

Golo (It's a metaphor)

To be continued...